Warm Dry by name, warm and dry by nature! This base layer from Oxford offers brilliant value for money if you're looking for a base layer this winter. Made from 93% polyester and 7% spandex the top has a smooth, stretchy feel to it that fits well on most body shapes and it's long enough to be comfortably tucked away with minimal riding up when reaching for the handlebars. The base layer has supposedly been treated with an anti-bacterial that kills bad odours, however it only took a single wear for the Warm Dry to start to smell pretty offensive. That being said, if you're going to have regular access to washing facilities the base layer performs very well in other areas. The thick material offers a generous amount of insulation and the moisture wicking properties are very good for a garment of this price. In terms of drying time it was up there with the best, coming in joint third at about three hours to be wearable again.
